

Ethics Review Procedure for Graduate Research Projects

The following guidelines from the Faculty Handbook will be followed with respect to all Graduate Student Applications:

5.2.1 Review of Graduate Student Research

Graduate student research that involves human subjects must undergo a full review by the REB; however, it follows a two-tier procedure. Graduate research must first be reviewed by the student's supervisor and one other faculty member in the student's department. Once the research proposal has ethics approval at the department level, it and a cover letter summarizing the department approval are forwarded to the REB for full review.
